SCCP Professor Earns Chalmers Distinguished Pharmacy Educator Award

The award recognizes excellence in teaching, research and scholarship.

Alexandria, Va.—The American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy will honor Jean M. Nappi, Pharm.D., FCCP, BCPS, professor of clinical pharmacy and outcome sciences at the South Carolina College of Pharmacy, for her excellence as a teacher, her outstanding achievements as a researcher and scholar, and her overall impact on pharmacy education and the profession.

Nappi will receive the Robert K. Chalmers Distinguished Pharmacy Educator Award on July 17 during the Examining Excellence Awards Plenary at the AACP Annual Meeting, Pharmacy Education 2012, in Kissimmee, Florida.

Throughout Nappi’s 34-year career she has made major contributions to pharmacy education that have had substantial impact around the country. She played a pivotal role in establishing Pharm.D. programs at multiple institutions and was instrumental in creating courses on pharmacotherapeutics.

“I am thrilled and humbled to be among the recipients of the Chalmers Award. Throughout my career, I have been fortunate to work with colleagues who are dedicated to their students and residents,” Nappi said. “We share a passion for pharmacy education and patient care and we continually encourage each other to become better educators and clinicians. I thank the many students and residents who have inspired and challenged me. Their constructive critiques motivated me to improve what I do. I also want to recognize my mentors at The University of Texas, especially Drs. Charlie Walton and Bob Leonard. Without their mentorship, I would not be where I am today.”

Nappi has been at the forefront of postgraduate residency training, particularly pharmacotherapy specialty residencies. She is a leader at the South Carolina College of Pharmacy in the area of interprofessional education and a substantial contributor to scholarship in pharmacy education. She has authored more than 125 publications, 34 of which directly contribute to pharmacy education.

Not only has Nappi had a significant impact on pharmacy education through her own work, but also through the careers of those she has taught. Nearly 80 students and residents have gone on to become pharmacy faculty members at approximately 40 pharmacy schools across the country, a record rarely matched in the academic pharmacy community.

“I never found a more motivated, energetic, and innovative practitioner and educator as Dr. Jean Nappi,” said Robert L. Page II, Pharm.D., associate professor of clinical pharmacy at the University of Colorado Schools of Pharmacy and Medicine and former mentee of Nappi’s. “Her many years of dedication to patient care and her contributions to clinical pharmacy education have made her an excellent role model to students, residents and new practitioners. She’s paved the way for growth and expansion in areas of clinical pharmacy practice and academic pharmacy.”
Nappi was appointed to lead the Medical University of South Carolina Residency Program in 1997. In that role she brought together 12 residency program directors under one administrative umbrella and was able to generate consensus that all PGY1 and PGY2 programs follow the same requirements for successful completion of the individual programs. Nappi also developed and implemented the first 24-month Pharmacotherapy Residency Program in the United States and served as its director for 11 years. It was developed to produce practitioners who are able to design and implement pharmacotherapy regimens for patients with a broad range of diseases and to work effectively in healthcare systems.

“It would be impossible to count the lives that have been touched and enhanced by the work of Dr. Nappi,” said Lucinda L. Maine, Ph.D., R.Ph., AACP executive vice president and CEO. “Her teaching has an exponential impact on patients as her inspired students go on to teach others and improve patient care.”

The award, named for the late Robert K. Chalmers, former AACP president and distinguished educator, consists of a Steuben glass owl sculpture and a monetary prize.

The 2012 AACP Annual Meeting will be held July 14-18 at the Gaylord Palms Resort and Convention Center in Kissimmee, Florida. The conference offers educational programming, exhibits, networking events and award presentations. Registration fees are waived for credentialed journalists.
