The AACP Annual Meeting Program Committee would like to provide further guidance to members for consideration when planning and preparing programming submissions for the AACP Annual Meeting. Each year AACP continues to receive a high number of programming submissions for a limited number of spots. In an effort to further attract a diverse pool of high-quality submissions, the program committee encourages individuals to submit no more than three programming proposals for consideration. To help ensure a diverse range of presentation topics and perspectives, the program committee intends to accept no more than two programming submissions from any one individual. Please note this only applies to submissions that an individual is serving as the submitter (i.e., an individual may be included on additional proposals that are submitted by other members). The program committee hopes this will encourage diversity of individuals presenting while maintaining high quality presentations at the AACP Annual Meeting. Recognizing that there will likely still remain more high-quality proposals than spots available, the program committee is working on developing alternative mechanisms for work to be shared across the Academy. These include the use of webinars and pre-recorded sessions. As the programming process adjusts to rising interest, the program committee welcomes your feedback for improvement and looks forward to your future programming submissions.
